授课时间: 7月6日-7月31日

周一 6-7 (13:00 开始); 周三 2-4; 周四 6-7 (13:00 开始)

课程简介： This course explores international political economy (IPE) in an era of globalization. Students will gain an understanding of how the contemporary global economy is shaped by transnational forces and flows, and how these impact on people's lived experiences. The course begins by thinking about globalization and development in historical context, and by critically reflecting on various approaches to understanding the global political economy. We move on to examine the increasing financialization of the global economy and transformations in the international division of labor, including the impact of such changes on development outcomes and experiences. We examine the role of the state in an era of globalization and consider whether transnational corporate power and trends in global and supranational governance have eroded the policy sovereignty of nations. A further key set of questions concerns debates around contemporary social crises related to the global political economy. In this light, we study the sources of the instability in the international financial system, and consider what might be done to deal with such systemic problems. We examine the global political economy of agriculture taking account of current debates and conflicts related to the politics of food, land and environment. We also enquire into the lived experiences of laboring and surviving "informally" within the global economy. The course concludes by reflecting on transformations and key debates in global governance including the impact of emerging market economies and alter-globalization movements.

授课时间： 7月6日-7月31日

课程简介： With a focus on the cultural dynamics of the Chinese marketplace, this course addresses a range of topical issues from the implications of globalization for everyday life in the context of unprecedented transformations, to the rise of entrepreneurship and consumerism in contemporary China, and to the relevance of values and morals for business practices. The key goal of this course is to provide a set of conceptual tools and a new perspective that will help students better describe and understand the local social world around you. In learning this new perspective, students will develop a critical, even “skeptical” view toward superficial explanations of take-for-granted practices by replacing common sense understanding of interpersonal interactions with an uncommon sense about the links between individual experiences, structural forces and particular marketplaces. Well-documented case studies and business ethnographies will be woven into in-class discussions as a way of grounding theory in marketing practices. Course readings will be arranged in weekly units around specific thematic issues. Discussions of the case study materials will be accompanied by presentations of the instructors’ research related to the application of anthropological, sociological methods of inquiry to business practices in different field settings.

授课时间： 7月6日-7月31日

周二 2-4； 周三 6-7（13:00 开始）； 周五 2-4

课程简介： This course deals with cultural and social interactivity of the past three decades between the historical deepening of China’s post-socialist reform and the vicissitudes of the culture of Chinese youth. In the four weeks of the course, each week is dedicated to one of the four distinctive and interrelated topics: food, sexuality, nationalism, and environment. In the week of “food”, the course explores the cultural politics of food by examining works such as Lu

Wenfu's The Gourmet and Ang Lee's Eat Drink Man Woman. In the week of "sexuality", the course ethnographizes recent Chinese dating culture ranging from urban night life, to the "leftover women" phenomenon, to the cultural sensation of If You Are the One (Fei Cheng Wu Rao). For the topic of nationalism, I analyze the ways the narration of the nation in Internet literature, film (e.g., Zhongguo Hehuoren), and television (e.g., Beijingren Zai Niuyue) gives rise to various public discourses of contemporary China, and defines social subjects such as netizens, media elites, and state-sponsored filmmakers. Last but not the least, the discussion of the "environment" week pivots around how young cultural workers engage environmental challenges China faces during its high speed development. Through the forms of documentary and feature films, these cultural workers reflect upon issues such as sustainable development and the balance of humanity and nature. The subthemes include eco-aesthetics, the relationship between water and politics, and the bioethics associated with the changing urban space.

课程简介: What is health? What is illness? What can we learn from TV-shows like the Biggest Loser or medical docudramas such as the ER? Why do some medical conditions gain a lot of media attention while others are hardly mentioned? In this course we explore how media represents health, risks and medical conditions, and the consequences thereof. The course connects media and communication studies with the sociology of health and illness and public health. It provides students with basic knowledge of how different notions of health and illness are produced and reproduced within various media contexts, and with an understanding of the consequences of this role of the media in Western societies. The course is structured around different themes that are analysed and investigated by students individually and in groups, in seminars and practical workshops. The focus of the course is on critical analysis of media health content.

授课时间：7月13日-8月7日：周一 2-4；周二 2-4；周四 2-4

Over 9 million employees work in American local government today including all jurisdictions from counties down to special districts. As the most basic link to citizens in the U.S. federal system, local governments perform an indispensable role in the delivery of essential government services. Safe and clean streets, housing, parks and recreation facilities and programs, public safety, and utilities are services we count on and come to expect in postmodern America. When these services are present, citizens hardly notice them, but when they are absent, reduced, or poorly delivered, they become irritatingly obvious. Across America, the principal responsibility for delivering these services falls on the shoulders of local government managers, administrators, and department heads. Under the supervision and guidance of city and county councils, and mayors, these local administrators attempt to provide the services we need as professionally as possible within the limits of their local resources.

Given this key service delivery function performed by local governments, the key objective of this course is to help you meld the practical with the theoretical in terms of the administration of local government. Specifically, by the end of the course students will be able to:

1. understand and describe the structure of American local government;
2. describe the politics/administration dichotomy and its impact on city management;
3. understand the nature and forms of citizen participation in local gov't. administration;
4. describe the role of neighborhood associations in city administration;
5. understand and describe the nature and role of city boards and commissions;
6. explain different approaches to managing economic development;
7. understand different theories regarding public personnel administration;
8. understand and describe the sources of revenue for American local government;

9. understand and describe the different forms of budgets, and the administration of local government budgeting.

授课时间: 7月13日-8月7日: 周二 6-8; 周四 2-4; 周五 2-4

课程简介: This is an introductory course in the study of international relations. The goal of this course is to be familiar with the concepts, ideas, and analytical tools necessary to understand state behavior and relationships among actors in the international arena. In this course we will look at the major concerns, issues, and players that characterize world politics. For instance, we will examine various theoretical explanations for state behaviors, such as realism, liberalism, and constructivism, as well as the historical context of contemporary international relations. We will use these theories to analyze the forces that affect state behavior and address some of the most pressing questions in international affairs. In order to understand connections among states, we will explore vital topics such as war, cooperation, international political economy, terrorism, and the forms of conflict that characterize the international system.

授课时间：7月13日-8月7日：周二 2-4；周三 2-4；周四 2-4

课程简介：The course will examine how information and communication technologies are used by citizens and politicians. We will ask how and why new media contributed to the quality of deliberation and the public sphere; we will address the relationship between Internet and political learning, and we will explore the extent to which media engender greater civic engagement and political participation. Our course will be cross-national and comparative, featuring studies related to Europe, the United States, the Middle East, Russia and the former Soviet Union, and China.

By the end of this course students will be able to:

- Critically analyse the role of new media in fostering civic and political engagement. This includes the contributions of new media to the quality of the public sphere and the marketplace of ideas, including whether new media increase the possibilities for an ideal speech situation, or whether new media contribute to greater incivility and discord
- Critically defend or reject the idea that the Internet plays an important causal role in mobilizing citizens to participate, including discussions of the role of information communication technologies in the events such as the Arab Spring.
- Analyse the role of new media in altering the information environment
- Understand and critique the central methodologies in studies of the Internet

教师所在院系：康奈迪克大学医学院

授课地点：复旦大学光华楼西辅楼 303 教室 HGX303

授课时间：7月13日-8月7日：周二 6-8；周四 2-4；周五 2-4

课程简介：This course will provide an overview of global health that includes the most prevalent diseases and health issues and their distribution, country and global population dynamics, the social and cultural context of disease and a review of the range of health services in low and middle income countries. Historical and current analysis of intervention programs to address global health problems will be presented. A methodology developed by the instructors will provide an approach to building student skills for health intervention design. Students will be asked to select a low and middle income (LMIC) country and apply course content and methods to an analysis of health problems in that country and approaches to prevention and treatment.

One or two short readings will be required for each class drawn from published papers or book chapters. Each class session will begin with a discussion of the reading to be followed by lecture-discussion in which the instructors will provide a general orientation to the topic and case studies and encourage students to ask questions and make comments. The next component will be small group work in which an issue or problem will be presented and students will be asked to discuss it and develop potential solutions. A final component in some classes will be an oral presentation on the country and the health problem selected. Instructors will meet with each student or groups of students to assist in country and health problem selection.
